Clearwater Technology have been members of Constructionline since 2000 and Jonathan Beverly, Business Development Manager at the company explains their reasons for becoming and remaining Constructionline accredited. 'We are a well established company working all over the UK and wanted to further extend our business opportunities and gain access to the public sector marketplace. The Constructionline accreditation has helped us achieve that plus the support from the Constructionline customer service team in terms of response times, knowledge and general helpfulness has always been good'.

> CUTTING DOWN COSTS . . .

The construction industry has always been burdened with the amount of administration that both the organisation issuing the tender and the one applying for it are forced to face. Jonathan and his colleagues have first hand experience with this and recognise the Constructionline accreditation as a good way to cut through the red tape. He explains, 'We make significant time savings amounting to hundreds of hours a year in not having to complete questionnaires. This benefit is growing year by year and amounts to over £1,500 per annum financial savings in staff time. On top of that we have the added benefit of having potential clients contact us when they are ready, not the other way round, which adds further savings in time and effort on our part'.
